BY CHARLES SPRAGUE.

We are but two—the others sleep. Through death's untroubled night. We are but two—Oh' let us keep. The link that binds us bright.

Heart isage to heart—the sacred flood. That warms us is the same; That good old man—his honest blood. Alike we foully claim.

We in one mother's arms were looked Long be her love republi. In the same cradle we were rocked, Round the same hearth we played.

Our boyash sports were all the same, Each little joy and woe: Let manhood keep alive the same Lit up so long age.

PUTTING A MAN IN A PINT BOTTLE.

BOTTLE.

The Spirit of the Times contains a letter from Scattogs Springs, which details a fining yoke put upon a gireen hora by the Magician Alexander, to appears that Alexander, to amuse his neighbors at the table, is in the labit of playing some trifling tricks, such as making their bread disappear, availabing his knill and fork, squeezing wine out of an old half-amoked segar, &c., which is antimisted a vong man at his side that the became a little sharmed. The Magician told him that those trick owere nothing, and that if he would make it an object, he would be thim that he could park sim, side above, since a part factle? They, like modern Solomons, gave a most righteetts decision vist: that in consideration of the delicate constitution of the subject, as his health might have been seriemely injured by the exposure, he was somewhat justified in not submitting further, but not sufficiently to annul the bet; and as the other party had not accomplished what he agreed to do, we conscientiously think and hereby recommend that the mesery in the hands of the stakeholder should be appropriated for champages, to be drought think and be appropriated for champagne, to be drauk this evening at 10 s clock, by all present. To which, of course, we all concentred, the Magician and his sphject shaking hands as a token of agreement. Thus onded the most laughable and ludicrous practical joke it was ever my fortune to witness.

MEXICAN WEALTH.

FROM THE TRAVELS OF BUMBOLDS.

This traveller affirms that the riches of Mexico are infinitely superior to those of Peru. I know of no Perusian family, says he, in the possession of a fixed and certain revenue of 130,000 france ($20,000.)—but in Mexico there are individuals who possess no mines, and whose revenue amounts to a million france ($20,000.) The family of the Count do la Valenciano possesses alone, on the ridge of the Andes, a property worth $2,000,000. of rance, ($5,000,000.) without including the mine of Valenciano, which yields one year with another, a nett revenue of 1,500,000 livres ($240,000.) The Count de Regia built at his own expense two vassels of the largest size, worth $400,000, and presented them to the King of Spain.

The family of Fagosga, well known for its beneficience, intelligence and real for the public good, shibite the example of the greatest wealth which was ever decreved in the state of the property of Seminory and the state of Sembredath, left in sive or six menuths, all charges deducted, a nett profit of $4,000,000.

The European reader will be still more astonished, when I inform him of the extraordinary fact, that this family lent about the year 1800, a sum of more than three millions and a half of france, ($700,000) without interest, to a friend whose former than their well-well own and only it is a solid manner.

The mines (says Humbeldt) have undoubtedly been the chief sources of the greatest fortunes of Mexico; but there is also a considerable number of Mexico; but there is also a considerable number of rich families who have never bad the working of any mines. Such are the descendant of Cortins, the conquerer of Mexico. The Duke of Membelon, the head of that family, poste-see superh estates in the province of Cazaca. They would yield him annual revenue of $300,000, but residing in Naples, the greater part of this sum is pocketed by collectors.

BicPERIOR FLOWR.—The flour made from the new wheat this year appears uncommonly fine, actribed to the fact that the unexampled demand for two-d-stuffs during the last year, has thrown into market the surplus on hand, so that the usual custom of mixing old with new wheat, grinding it together and sending it to market an new flour, is largely diminished if not entirely prevented. The result necessarily follows, that the market is applied for the most part with flour derived from new wheat without mixture, which is infinitely sweeter and better than what has been termed new flour in former years.
